

Andrew Grossman, Principal Grossman Heinz

Andrew Grossman is a Principal at Grossman Heinz, a public affairs firm that specializes in government affairs, strategy, and management consulting for advocacy and electoral campaigns.

Most recently, Andy directed the 2012 Democratic National Convention Platform Committee. As Director of the Common Purpose Project Health Care Working Group in 2009-10, he served as a key advisor to the White House and Senate Democrats and played a central role in passage of the Affordable Care Act.

Over the last several years, Andy has advised: the National Partnership for Women and Families Campaign for Better Care, which advocates for health care delivery reform for vulnerable seniors; Planned Parenthood, which operates a network of more than 800 primary care clinics throughout the US, and the Connecticut health care exchange organized under the Affordable Care Act.

Andy founded and served as President of Wal-Mart Watch, a new model of non-profit advocacy, to challenge the world's largest business to be a better corporate citizen. Wal-Mart responded to this challenge by launching its landmark environmental initiative and endorsing the Affordable Care Act.

Earlier in his career Andy led the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, the electoral arm of the Senate Democrats.

Andy is a graduate of Colby College. He serves on the advisory board of the Columbia Law School State Attorneys General Program, the National Advisory Board of the Council for a Livable World and on the Washington Advisory Board of Colby's Goldfarb Center for Public Policy.
